

Mars Rules the Eighth House

The Eighth House is a house of loss. The loss is usually financial, and the most practical expressions of the Eighth House involve debt and other financial obligations. The money you make through the Eighth House comes from legacies and inheritances, so even these financial gains are the result of loss (i.e., death). The Eighth House is the house of your partner's money and resources. Where the Second House is "mine" and the Seventh House is "yours," the Eighth House is "ours."

The Eighth House is your debt.

If you're like most people, when you hear the word "debt" you immediately assume two things: it involves money and it's bad. Neither of those things is universally true, and adjusting your definition of debt and your judgments about it is an important step towards experiencing prosperity. Whatever the external expressions of debt may be, your actual debt is the planet that rules your Eighth House. The needs and expression of that planet are the Universal Puzzle Piece that connects to your personal experience of debt. You owe the expression of that planet to others. Meeting the needs of that planet carries an extra level of obligation for you. But remember that debt flows in two directions. Just as you owe the expression of the ruler of your Eighth House to others, other people also owe it to you. The most important lesson about debt is that it's an expression of the Law of Circulation. You both give and receive support.

And that's another important thing to remember about debt: it's evidence of support. When you owe someone, it means that they provided you with help and support when you needed it. Other people owe you because you provided them with help and support, and they will repay that support at some point in the future. The most appropriate attitude towards debt is gratitude.

That being said, the financial expression of debt is an important consideration. Debt is part of a bigger picture of your prosperity. It's important to be conscious of your financial obligations and the money you owe (as well as the money owed to you). It's an odd concept, but in the world of finance, debt can be viewed as an asset. Personal financial debt often feels like a burden, however, and it's important to manage it consciously. This becomes easier when you remember that even your credit card balances and your student loan debt are really about your relationship to the needs and expression of the planet that rules your Eighth House. When you manage the needs of that planet, you manage your debt.

The Eighth House is your shared resources.

You are responsible for your Eighth House, but you're not exclusively responsible for it. The Eighth House is like a joint bank account. You can make deposits and withdrawals from the account, but so can other people. You're still responsible for maintaining the minimum balance in the account, but you don't have full or complete control over it. The planet that rules your Eighth House is your shared resources, and the needs and expressions of that planet are joint bank accounts. On the plus side, other people can make deposits in those accounts, which means you often have more resources available to you than you expect, and meeting the needs of that planet is easy. But the down side is that other people can also make withdrawals from that account, which means there may be less available to you when you need it the most. The bottom line is that everything associated with the Eighth House—and the needs of the planet that rules the Eighth House—is a collaboration. To some degree, you will need to pool your resources and coordinate with other people to accomplish your Eighth House goals.

In the external world, managing shared resources, such as joint checking accounts, shared food and supplies, or communal living spaces, has its own set of challenges. It's easier and more harmonious when everyone agrees on the rules and boundaries up front, so everyone contributes equally and shares in both the responsibilities and the rewards. This is not quite as easy in your internal world because other people don't actually agree to pool their resources to help you meet the needs of the ruler of your Eighth House. You can't hold them accountable for doing their part because it's not really their business in the first place. You can, however, limit access to your joint bank accounts. If someone isn't making regular deposits in your account, you can block their access.

Mars Rules the Eighth House

Your ego is your debt; your debt is your ego.

Your ego is your debt. It's what you owe, and it's what other people owe you. Remember that debt is evidence of support. When you owe someone, it means that they provided you with help and support when you needed it, and others owe you for the help and support you gave them. When you are confident of your identity and don't need to prove yourself to others, you inspire and support other people, and you actively engage with the Law of Circulation. You both give and receive support, and this creates prosperity for you. But when you are unsure of yourself and have to defend your choices and prove that you are right, debt feels like a burden. You worry about your ability to repay your debts, and you are reluctant to accept support when you need it because that would mean taking on more debt, all of which limits your ability to deliver a convincing performance as your character. On a personal level, when you are unsure of yourself and have to defend your choices and prove that you are right, you become overly concerned about your financial obligations. You focus on lack, and on what you owe, and this disrupts the flow of circulation and limits your prosperity. You want to be free of all debt, because you believe this will make you independent and prosperous, and you believe when that happens, other people won't challenge or attack you and you won't have to defend yourself.

Right Relationship with your ego gives you the experience of Power. You have unlimited self-confidence and you are secure in both the character you are playing in your life and in the quality of the performance that you're giving. But until you find this balance, you will over-identify with your character and believe that your identity is limited to your physical body. You fear the death of the ego/body, and this means you must always be right because the smallest mistake could result in your destruction. You must remember that the real you is the actor playing your character. No matter what happens to your character, the actor, your authentic Self, will survive. When you let go of the need to defend your character choices, you will discover it's okay to make mistakes, and that you don't always have to be right. This lesson is especially challenging for you with your debt, because you identify personally with debt, and feel the need to protect and defend it. Pride is likely to be a significant factor in your relationship to debt. You may refuse help from others when you need it because your pride tells you that accepting help is a sign of weakness, and that being in debt to anyone makes you weak. On the other hand, the more other people owe you, the stronger you think you are. But if you refuse to accept support, you violate the Law of Circulation, and it limits the amount of prosperity you can experience.

You can learn about your "little s" self and the character you play by engaging with your debt. Rather than considering your financial debts, look for an example of a debt you owe that relates to your ego and your "little s" self. Anything that feels like an obligation you have, or a promise that you have made will do. First, consider how you created that debt. Remember the support that you received, acknowledge how much it helped you to accomplish something that you wanted at the time, and take a few moments to experience gratitude for that support. Next, become conscious of how you expect to repay that debt. You don't necessarily have to pay back the person who provided the support. When it comes to debts of your ego, you can often pay them forward by embodying your "little s" self and helping others to get the things that they want when they are in need. The more confident you are in your character and the less you have to prove, the more you will engage with the Law of Circulation and experience prosperity.

LIGHT BULB QUESTIONS

What part of the description of your ego and your debt resonated the most with you?

Where do you see this in your life? How does it show up for you?

What part of the description of your ego and your debt resonated the least with you?

What about that description doesn't seem to apply to you and why?

What are some examples of how you owe a debt of your “little s” self? To whom do you owe that debt? What support did you receive to create that debt?

What are some examples of how someone else owes you a debt of their “little s” self, so that you expect them to play the role of their character as a part of your story? What support did you give to create that debt? How and when do you expect to collect it?

PUZZLE QUESTIONS

Where and how do you receive support with your ego when you need it?

What is it about debt that you feel the need to protect and defend the most?

How do you define or describe yourself in terms of debt?

Who would you be without debt? How would you know yourself?

Your ego is your shared resources; your shared resources are your ego.

Because your ego is a shared resource, it operates like a joint bank account. You are personally responsible for it, but you're not exclusively responsible for it. You look for support and collaboration when you play the character of your “little s” self, because when you pool your resources, you can accomplish far more than you can on your own. When you are confident of your identity and don't need to prove yourself to others, these partnerships work out beautifully. Everyone contributes to your ego account, so it's always there when you need it, and it never runs out. Whenever you need help or support, someone is always there to pick up the slack, and you do the same for them. But when you are unsure of yourself and have to defend your choices and prove that you are right, other people don't contribute equally, and your ego account is often overdrawn. You may do your part to make deposits and maintain your resources, but other people's withdrawals drain the account and leave you feeling unsupported and used. On a personal level, when you lack self-confidence, these inequalities will play out in your relationships and with your actual shared resources, such as joint bank accounts, communal food, office supplies, and shared spaces. It may feel like you're doing all the work and you're cleaning up other people's messes. As hard as it can be, you must find the line that marks the boundary of My Business, and stay on your side of it. You pool your resources with others because you want the support of a community. You believe that when you have a communal safety net, other people won't challenge or attack you and you won't have to defend yourself.

Right Relationship with your ego gives you the experience of Power. You have unlimited self-confidence and you are secure in both the character you are playing in your life and in the quality of the performance that you're giving. But until you find this balance, you will over-identify with your character and believe that your identity is limited to your physical body. You fear the death of the ego/body, and this means you must always be right because the smallest mistake could result in your destruction. You must remember that the real you is the actor playing your character. No matter what happens to your character, the actor, your authentic Self, will survive. When you let go of the need to defend your character choices, you will discover it's okay to make mistakes, and that you don't always have to be right. This lesson is especially challenging for you with a shared resource, because you identify personally with shared resources, and feel the need to protect and defend them. When you pool your resources with others, you can achieve more than you could on your own, but it also limits your options. A part of your identity is defined by these relationships, and you have to incorporate those obligations and responsibilities into your character. This is not entirely comfortable for you.

You can learn about your "little s" self and the character you play by engaging with your shared resources. Begin by identifying your shared resources. These include every situation where you collaborate with others or pool your resources so that you get a smaller slice of a larger pie. Consider that when you engage with those shared resources, what you're really sharing is your ego and your "little s" self. Evaluate whether you are pulling your own weight in this endeavor. If you don't feel supported and you don't see the advantages of the collaboration, it may be a sign that you aren't contributing enough by helping other people to get what they want. It could also be a sign that you aren't claiming the support that's available to you to pursue the agenda of your "little s" self and get the things that you want. Explore your relationship to your shared resources and find the correct point of balance with how you give and receive your ego and your "little s" self. Your shared resources need to help you to express the character of your "little s" self more fully than you could on your own. If that is not the case, you may need to find a new opportunity to collaborate. The more confident you are in your character and the less you have to prove, the more you will benefit from pooling your resources.

LIGHT BULB QUESTIONS

What part of the description of your ego and your shared resources resonated the most with you? Where do you see this in your life? How does it show up for you?

What part of the description of your ego and your shared resources resonated the least with you? What about that description doesn't seem to apply to you and why?

What are some examples of how you pool your resources of your "little s" self with other people? How do you contribute to that collective? What benefits do you receive in return?

Who has access to the bank account of your "little s" self? Do they make more contributions to the balance or withdrawals? Does this arrangement work for you? Why or why not?

PUZZLE QUESTIONS

Where are the limits of My Business with your ego? What is the limit of how much you can make up for other people's shortfalls? What is the limit of how much you can expect other people to make up for your shortfalls?

What is it about shared resources that you feel the need to protect and defend?

How do you define or describe yourself in terms of shared resources?

Who would you be without shared resources? How would you know yourself?

Your anger is your debt; your debt is your anger.

Anger is your debt. It's what you owe, and it's what other people owe you. Remember that debt is evidence of support. When you owe someone, it means that they provided you with help and support when you needed it, and others owe you for the help and support you gave them. When you master the energy of anger and use that energy in conscious and constructive ways, you inspire and support other people, and you actively engage with the Law of Circulation. You both give and receive support, and this creates prosperity for you. But when you struggle with your anger by repressing it, projecting it, or lashing out with it, debt feels like a burden. You worry about your ability to repay your debts, and you are reluctant to accept support when you need it because that would mean taking on more debt, all of which limits your ability to master your anger. On a personal level, when you fail to address your anger, you become overly concerned about your financial obligations. You focus on lack, and on what you owe, and this disrupts the flow of circulation and limits your prosperity. You want to be free of all debt, because you believe this will make you independent and prosperous, and when that happens, you will get what you want when you want it, and the world won't piss you off.

The energy of anger can connect you with an experience of Power, but first, you must separate the experience of anger from the story you have created about it. No matter what the appearance is in your reality, your anger is never about what it appears to be about. When you tap into the energy of anger, you must learn to drop the story and refrain from reacting (which would use force and only make the situation worse). Take a moment and drop every part of the story that is not a part of My Business, and then let go of your expectations. This is the most challenging for you with your debt, because your debt is an area where you have strong expectations and experience high levels of frustration. The more you try to control your debt, the more anger you will experience, and directing the energy of your anger at your debt only makes the situation worse. Additionally, every time you engage with the energy of anger, you create a debt that must be repaid with the energy of anger. If someone is the target of your anger, you owe them, and they are entitled to direct their anger at you. And if someone has directed their anger at you, you feel entitled to repay them in kind. This is the kind of an “eye-for-an-eye” approach that can leave the whole world blind, and it’s not your only option. When you master your anger, the energy of anger can help everyone involved to become happy.

You can begin to master your anger by engaging with your debt. You may not recognize the energy of anger because it won’t always reach the level of intensity you associate with the emotion of anger. Anytime you feel impatient, frustrated, defensive, annoyed, or stressed, you are experiencing the energy of anger. Rather than considering your financial debts, look for an example of a debt you owe that relates to anger. Anything that feels like an obligation you have, or a promise that you have made about anger will do. First, consider how you created that debt. Remember the support that you received, acknowledge how much it helped you to handle the energy of your anger at the time, and take a few moments to experience gratitude for that support. Next, become conscious of how you expect to repay that debt. You don’t necessarily have to pay back the person who provided the support. When it comes to debts of anger, you can often pay them forward by mastering your anger and using the energy of anger constructively on behalf of others. The more you learn to master your anger, the more you will engage with the Law of Circulation and experience prosperity.

LIGHT BULB QUESTIONS

What part of the description of your anger and your debt resonated the most with you?
Where do you see this in your life? How does it show up for you?

What part of the description of your anger and your debt resonated the least with you?
What about that description doesn’t seem to apply to you and why?

What are some examples of how you owe a debt of anger? To whom do you owe that debt? What support did you receive to create that debt?

What are some examples of how someone else owes you a debt of anger? What support did you give to create that debt? How and when do you expect to collect it?

PUZZLE QUESTIONS

Where and how do you receive support with your anger when you need it?

What are some examples of how debt makes you angry, frustrated, or resentful?

How do you use debt to express your anger?

How do you express your anger at debt? How does that affect the situation?

Your anger is your shared resources; your shared resources are your anger.

Because anger is a shared resource, it operates like a joint bank account. You are personally responsible for it, but you're not exclusively responsible for it. You look for support and collaboration when you channel the energy of anger, because when you pool your resources, you can accomplish far more than you can on your own. When you master the energy of anger and use that energy in conscious and constructive ways, these partnerships work out beautifully. Everyone contributes to your anger account, so it's always there when you need it, and it never runs out. Whenever you need help or support, someone is always there to pick up the slack, and you do the same for them. But when you struggle with your anger by repressing it, projecting it, or lashing out with it, other people don't contribute equally, and your anger account is often overdrawn. You may do your part to make deposits and maintain your resources, but other people's withdrawals drain the account and leave you feeling unsupported and used. On a personal level, when you fail to address your anger, these inequalities will play out in your relationships and with your actual shared resources, such as joint bank accounts, communal food, office supplies, and shared spaces. It may feel like you're doing all the work and you're cleaning up other people's messes. As hard as it can be, you must find the line that marks the boundary of My Business, and stay on your side of it. You pool your resources with others because you want the support of a community. You believe that when you have a communal safety net, you will get what you want when you want it, and the world won't piss you off.

The energy of anger can connect you with an experience of Power, but first, you must separate the experience of anger from the story you have created about it. No matter what the appearance is in your reality, your anger is never about what it appears to be about. When you tap into the energy of anger, you must learn to drop the story and refrain from reacting (which would use force and only make the situation worse). Take a moment and drop every part of the story that is not a part of My Business, and then let go of your expectations. This is the most challenging for you with your shared resources, because your shared resources are where you have strong expectations and experience high levels of frustration. The more you try to control your shared resources, the more anger you will experience, and directing the energy of your anger at your shared resources only makes the situation worse. The energy of anger itself is a shared resource for you. When you experience it in a community or pool your anger with others, it becomes more intense, and also less personal, so it's easier for you to work with it.

You can begin to master your anger by engaging with your shared resources. Begin by identifying your shared resources. These include every situation where you collaborate with others or pool your resources so that you get a smaller slice of a larger pie. Consider that when you engage with those shared resources, what you're really sharing is the energy of anger. And if you can't think of any external shared resources, just consider how you collaborate and share anger directly. You may not recognize the energy of anger because it won't always reach the level of intensity you associate with the emotion of anger. Anytime you feel impatient, frustrated, defensive, annoyed, or stressed, you are experiencing the energy of anger. Evaluate whether you are pulling your own weight in this endeavor. If you don't feel supported and you don't see the advantages of the collaboration, it may be a sign that you aren't contributing enough. It could also be a sign that you aren't claiming the support that's available to you. The other members of the collective are there to help you to channel the energy of your anger, so you don't have to deal with it on your own. Explore your relationship to your shared resources and find the correct point of balance with how you experience and channel the energy of anger. The more you learn to master your anger, the more you will benefit from pooling your resources.

LIGHT BULB QUESTIONS

What part of the description of your anger and your shared resources resonated the most with you? Where do you see this in your life? How does it show up for you?

What part of the description of your anger and your shared resources resonated the least with you? What about that description doesn't seem to apply to you and why?

What are some examples of how you pool your resources of anger with other people? How do you contribute to that collective? What benefits do you receive in return?

Who has access to the bank account of your anger? Do they make more contributions to the balance or withdrawals? Does this arrangement work for you? Why or why not?

PUZZLE QUESTIONS

What expectations do you have about everyone's role with anger? Do you meet those expectations? Do other people meet them?

Where are the limits of My Business with anger? What is the limit of how much you can make up for other people's shortfalls? What is the limit of how much you can expect other people to make up for your shortfalls?

What are some examples of how your shared resources make you angry, frustrated, or resentful?

How do you use your shared resources to express your anger?

How do you express your anger at your shared resources? How does that affect the situation?

Mars, the Ruler of your Eighth House in Houses

The house occupied by the Ruler of the Eighth House shows where you are most susceptible to debt and financial loss. This is the area of life where your ambitions exceed your personal resources, so you seek the support of other individuals to finance your goals. This is where you seek partners and investors and are the most willing to collaborate and to pool your resources with others.

JOURNAL QUESTIONS & INSTRUCTIONS

Begin by reviewing the chapter in the video lesson on Mars that explores the house that Mars, the Ruler of your Eighth House occupies. Then locate and read the description of the house occupied by Mars, the Ruler of your Eighth House. Now, go back and revisit each of the journal questions about how you experience Mars as the ruler of your Eighth House, and notice how the house Mars occupies influences your understanding.

Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in the First House

With Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in your First House, you encounter your ego, your anger, your debt, and your shared resources in your personality and outer appearance. The resources of the First House include your health, your happiness, your appearance, and your very identity. You will use your personal interests and happiness to be confident of who you think you are, and other people will notice this in your appearance and your personality. You will use your personal interests and happiness to channel the energy of anger constructively, and other people will notice this in your appearance and your personality. You will use your personal interests and happiness to repay your debts and obligations, and other people will notice this in your appearance and your personality. And you will use your personal interests and happiness to merge your assets and manage your shared resources, and other people will notice this in your appearance and your personality. These behaviors may cause disruptions to your First House, affecting your avatar, your outer appearance, your happiness, and how much you enjoy your hobbies and interests. In turn, this may affect your ability to meet the needs of the planet that rules your First House.

Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in the in the Second House

With Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in your Second House, you encounter your ego, your anger, your debt, and your shared resources in your money and resources. The resources of the Second House include your money, your personal possessions, and the skills and talents you have that can be used to earn money. You will spend money and use your talents to be confident of who you think you are. You will spend money and use your talents to channel the energy of anger constructively. You will spend money and use your talents to repay your debts and obligations. And you will spend money and use your talents to merge your assets and manage your shared resources. These behaviors may cause disruptions to your Second House, specifically because they encourage you to spend your money, but they don't necessarily help you to earn more money or connect to the truth of your prosperity. In turn, this may affect your ability to meet the needs of the planet that rules your Second House.

Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in the in the Third House

With Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in your Third House, you encounter your ego, your anger, your debt, and your shared resources in your comfort zone. The resources of your Third House are all local, close, and familiar. You can communicate to your network to ask for support, but you will only call people you already know and have worked with before. You rely on your familiar habits and local resources to be confident of who you think you are, and you rarely consider new options. You rely on your familiar habits and local resources to channel the energy of anger constructively, and you rarely consider new options. You rely on your familiar habits and local resources to repay your debts and obligations, and you rarely consider new options. And rely on your familiar habits and local resources to merge your assets and manage your shared resources, and you rarely consider new options. These behaviors may cause disruptions to your Third House, creating changes to your comfort zone that make it less familiar and less comfortable, and forcing you to pay attention to your habits and routines. In turn, this may affect your ability to meet the needs of the planet that rules your Third House.

Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in the in the Fourth House

With Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in your Fourth House, you encounter your ego, your anger, your debt, and your shared resources in your private life. The resources of the Fourth House include your private and personal life, your home, real estate, tradition, and family connections. You do not want to be noticed when you be confident of who you think you are, because it's personal and private. You do not want to be noticed when you channel the energy of anger constructively, because it's personal and private. You do not want to be noticed when you repay your debts and obligations, because it's personal and private. And you do not want to be noticed when you merge your assets and manage your shared resources, because it's personal and private. Your pursuit of privacy may disrupt your Fourth House, shaking the very foundation of your life. This may affect your ability to meet the needs of the planet that rules your Fourth House.

Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in the in the Fifth House

With Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in your Fifth House, you encounter your ego, your anger, your debt, and your shared resources in your creativity and fun. The resources of the Fifth House include games, gambling, entertainment, art, creativity, and all forms of amusement and recreation. You are willing to take creative risks to be confident of who you think you are, and you expect to have fun in the process. You are willing to take creative risks to channel the energy of anger constructively, and you expect to have fun in the process. You are willing to take creative risks to repay your debts and obligations, and you expect to have fun in the process. And you are willing to take creative risks to merge your assets and manage your shared resources, and you expect to have fun in the process. These behaviors may cause disruptions to your Fifth House, especially if you don't feel that you have been creative enough or if you're not having fun. This may affect your ability to meet the needs of the planet that rules your Fifth House.

Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in the in the Sixth House

With Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in your Sixth House, you encounter your ego, your anger, your debt, and your shared resources in your job, your workplace environment, and your relationships with co-workers and employees. The resources of the Sixth House include hard work and selfless service. You expect to work hard to be confident of who you think you are, and you rarely get recognized or rewarded for it. You expect to work hard to channel the energy of anger constructively, and you rarely get recognized or rewarded for it. You expect to work hard to repay your debts and obligations, and you rarely get recognized or rewarded for it. And you expect to work hard to merge your assets and manage your shared resources, and you rarely get recognized or rewarded for it. These behaviors may cause disruptions to your Sixth House, especially because you are always looking for ways to lighten the workload, so you may try to hire someone to do the work for you, or failing that, you may create illness so you can call in sick. This may affect your ability to meet the needs of the planet that rules your Sixth House.

Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in the in the Seventh House

With Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in your Seventh House, you encounter your ego, your anger, your debt, and your shared resources in your one-to-one relationships. The resources of the Seventh House appear to be other individuals because you project everything associated with planets in your Seventh House on other people and you don't recognize that those qualities live in you. You expect other individuals to be confident of who you think you are for you and may blame them if they don't. You expect other individuals to channel the energy of anger constructively for you and may blame them if they don't. You expect other individuals to repay your debts and obligations for you and may blame them if they don't. And you expect other individuals to merge your assets and manage your shared resources for you and may blame them if they don't. These behaviors may cause disruptions to your Seventh House by creating difficulties in your one-to-one relationships. And while the problems will appear to be about other people, they're really your own issues. This may affect your ability to meet the needs of the planet that rules your Seventh House.

Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in the in the Eighth House

With Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in your Eighth House, you encounter your ego, your anger, your debt, and your shared resources in your debts and shared resources. The resources of the Eighth house are other people's money, values, and opinions. This money is available to you in the form of loans, investments, or simply credit card debt. You will collaborate, use shared resources, ask for favors, or use other people's money to be confident of who you think you are. You will collaborate, use shared resources, ask for favors, or use other people's money to channel the energy of anger constructively. You will collaborate, use shared resources, ask for favors, or use other people's money to repay your debts and obligations. And you will collaborate, use shared resources, ask for favors, or use other people's money to merge your assets and manage your shared resources. These behaviors may cause disruptions to your Eighth House because they will increase your awareness of your debt, both personal (what you owe other people) and financial (the money you owe to others). This may affect your ability to meet the needs of the planet that rules your Eighth House.

Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in the Ninth House

With Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in your Ninth House, you encounter your ego, your anger, your debt, and your shared resources in your danger zone. The resources of the Ninth House are all foreign, distant, new, unfamiliar, and unknown to you. They include experts and authorities that can offer wisdom and knowledge, such as teachers, religious leaders, lawyers, and doctors. You always require new information to be confident of who you think you are because what you already know is not sufficient. You always require new information to channel the energy of anger constructively because what you already know is not sufficient. You always require new information to repay your debts and obligations because what you already know is not sufficient. And you always require new information to merge your assets and manage your shared resources because what you already know is not sufficient. These behaviors may cause disruption to your Ninth House because the new information you acquire may challenge and alter your beliefs. This may affect your ability to meet the needs of the planet that rules your Ninth House.

Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in the Tenth House

With Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in your Tenth House, you encounter your ego, your anger, your debt, and your shared resources in your public and professional image. The resources of the Tenth House include your reputation, your public image, and the passwords to all of your social media accounts. You want to be famous for your ability to be confident of who you think you are, so you broadcast it to the world and share it on social media. You want to be famous for your ability to channel the energy of anger constructively, so you broadcast it to the world and share it on social media. You want to be famous for your ability to repay your debts and obligations, so you broadcast it to the world and share it on social media. And you want to be famous for your ability to merge your assets and manage your shared resources, so you broadcast it to the world and share it on social media. These behaviors may cause disruptions to your Tenth House and affect both your personal and your professional reputation. This may affect your ability to meet the needs of the planet that rules your Tenth House.

Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in the Eleventh House

With Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in your Eleventh House, you encounter your ego, your anger, your debt, and your shared resources in your ambitions and aspirations. The resources of the Eleventh House are your benefactors: friends, colleagues, and teammates who are in a position to support you and help you to acquire the things you believe will make you happy. You depend on the support and encouragement of your friends and benefactors to be confident of who you think you are so you can acquire happiness. You depend on the support and encouragement of your friends and benefactors to channel the energy of anger constructively so you can acquire happiness. You depend on the support and encouragement of your friends and benefactors to repay your debts and obligations so you can acquire happiness. And you depend on the support and encouragement of your friends and benefactors to merge your assets and manage your shared resources so you can acquire happiness. These behaviors may cause disruptions to your Eleventh House and affect not only your ambitions and aspirations, but also the level of support you receive from your friends and benefactors. This may affect your ability to meet the needs of the planet that rules your Eleventh House.

Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in the Twelfth House

With Mars, the Ruler of the Eighth House in your Twelfth House you are unconscious of your ego, your anger, your debt, and your shared resources. The Twelfth House is above the horizon, so everything about planets in the Twelfth House is visible to others, but it's all in your blind spot, so you're the last to know about it. The resources of the Twelfth House include your hidden motivations, your unconscious programming, your shadow self, and your personal demons. You are not conscious of what motivates you to be confident of who you think you are, and it will have unexpected consequences. You are not conscious of what motivates you to channel the energy of anger constructively, and it will have unexpected consequences. You are not conscious of what motivates you to repay your debts and obligations, and it will have unexpected consequences. And you are not conscious of what motivates you to merge your assets and manage your shared resources, and it will have unexpected consequences. These behaviors may cause disruptions to your Twelfth House, causing resentment and creating hidden enemies. This may affect your ability to meet the needs of the planet that rules your Twelfth House.